

May 5, 2008

Cinco de Mayo

The Italian upstart wins again – France declares a state of emergency

Order in the Universe has been upset by the second consecutive victory of the Italian Santa Margherita Prosecco over the contender from the popular French house of Heidsieck. The contest was close with Poncho, our host, casting the tie breaking vote. Rarely have circumstances made it necessary for the host's vote to be part of the official decision. Can the Prosecco continue the string of upsets and what might be the next challenger?

The contenders

The club members at work

Poncho pouring

The club members look on as Poncho, while muttering obscene comments about Boon's ancestry, serves the Champagne.

Calamity and Kit

May 5, 2008

The Cinco de Mayo Celebration

The meeting was scheduled to coincide with Cinco de Mayo. However, after in-depth discussion it became clear that none of the club members had a clue as to why May 5th is important to anyone. It should be noted that despite the ignorance the party was great.

Unfortunately Cattle "Friggin" Kate was unable to attend the meeting. She gave a lame excuse having to do with gainful employment – a disturbing trend.

The added attractions

Calamity brought the bottle because the wine was good and the horse butts priceless

The ever popular "Widow" was also a welcome treat for the club members

The club members at play

Calamity seriously considering the important Italy vs. France decision

Hia in what has become her favorite pose

The seldom photographed Boon – for obvious reasons

Poncho, once again avoiding the profile shot. Unfortunately his eyes are closed and his ear is green.