The meeting had a tropical theme complete with palm tree and appropriate(?) attire. Guests from the West, Annie "Friggin" Oakley and Bat "Friggin" Masterson clearly got into the spirit. In the group picture Poncho exhibits his now trademark profile.

Like the previous meeting, rather than tasting the reigning champion and a challenger, two challengers competed. One, Andre Clouet (dubbed "Andy Clout" by the French challenged club members) was new to the 361 club.

In a spirited tasting (pun intended) the newcomer scored a solid four to two victory. Poncho and Kit cast the dissenting votes while Calamity, Hia, Annie and Bat picked the winner. Boon, who poured, did not vote.

This page is dedicated to what is becoming a club Easter tradition introduced by Annie "Friggin" Oakley - bizarre adaptations of the marshmallow peep. Although one of last year's favorites, Peep Kabob, was missing there was plenty to keep the club members interested.

Last year we were introduced to Peep Jerky, a flattened, aged version of the traditional peep. The jerky in the picture is the current production model appropriately adorned for the tropical theme.

To replace the missing Peep Kabob this year Annie introduced paintable peeps. With the exception of Boon, who completely lacks hand/eye coordination the club members proved quite artistic.

As a testament to its versatility the peep proves to be a welcome addition to a traditional dessert.

Note: Always on the lookout for new opportunities Poncho, Director of Product Development, is researching marshmallow lions.
